During the concert, the fan was able to bypass security and gain access to the stage. Of course, this infuriated Minaj after "a concert goer broke through the security barricade separating the audience from the stage and was able to enter the stage during Minaj's performance. Passing to the stage, a concert visitor passed a female security guard standing at the stairs leading to the stage.

At the time, Minaj was reportedly unhappy with the apology and began filming the interaction, demanding the woman “tell Minaj fans via tape that she didn’t do her job and put Minaj in danger.” As the groups dispersed, Minaj allegedly “thrown her shoes” at a security guard, but missed.

After the incident, Weidenmüller claims he was called backstage after the concert to speak with the artist. Nicky’s then-boyfriend Kenneth Petty, approached him with Minaj and two other personal bodyguards. According to the lawsuit, Minaj began to shower him with insults and obscenities, again accusing him of having a physical or romantic relationship with another female security guard.

"Without warning, Petty DELETED Weidenmüller from the side and hit the right side [his] face, he says. At the time, according to the man, he "immediately felt intense pain and was momentarily disoriented, and had to step aside around a corner to collect himself." He continued: "After two or three minutes, believing that his jaw was broken, Weidenmüller turned the corner again, returning to the place where Petty hit him."

It is reported that the police were called to the scene, and a criminal case was opened.

Due to the severity of his injuries, the man was allegedly hospitalized for ten days and "as a result of the brutal attack, Petty suffered a broken jaw".
